PBCC HIRES NEW CHIEF INFORMATION OFFICER

(Lake Worth, Fla. — July 17, 2003) Anthony Parziale has been named chief information officer at Palm Beach Community College.

He comes to PBCC from Maxxim Medical, Inc. in Clearwater, Fla., where he served as group vice president of information technology and chief technology officer since 2000. As CIO, Parziale will oversee the College's computer resources and technology.

Parziale has an extensive background in business technology. He has led the information technology operations of several large companies and organizations, including Folded Edge Inc. and Cluett, Peabody & Company, Inc. in Atlanta, the Town of Groton in Connecticut and Belcher Hospital in Belchertown, Mass.

He served as director of computer services at American International College from 1985 to 1987, where he also taught undergraduate courses in information technology, business administration and computer science and operations research. He helped establish AIC's undergraduate program in computer information systems. Parziale also taught information technology and accounting courses part-time at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

He holds a bachelor's degree in computer information systems from Suffolk University and an M.B.A. from the University of Massachusetts.
