Taking over the project of someone else is often a precarious position. After many challenges, we are pleased to present the result. From the weird world of quantum mechanics and the characters of Matthiessen to the impressive history of the German people and the tradition of the American Supreme Court, this issue crosses a wide spectrum of human knowledge and inquiry.

We would like to thank several individuals who greatly helped us in the development of this issue. Valerie Burks gave us the resources for us to continue, although having her leave this semester made it difficult. Also, we are very grateful to Belen Lowrey who has acted as our official advisor this semester. She attended almost every meeting, and we greatly appreciate her devotion to the journal. The guidance and experience they both provided us with throughout the semester made this issue possible, and we thank them.

Also, we would like to express our gratitude to the library staff. Their patience when it came to our boisterous discussions concerning manuscripts is greatly appreciated. Most importantly, this publication would not be possible without our reviewers. We would like to thank everyone who was willing to take time to review papers for this issue:

This has been a long but fulfilling process for both of us. This journal fulfills the important purpose of displaying the work of motivated PBCC students. With that in mind, we hope you will consider submitting any research papers that you feel especially proud of for inclusion to our next issue.
